Draft Deserter Hides Two Years In a Cave

(By Associated Press) CHILICOTHE, Ohio, May 15.—Stories of how a neighbor deserter from the Union army during the civil war had been brought to bay and shot, brought visions of a similar fate to Carl Amerine and impelled him to hide in the hills for two years. Amerine was drafted into the army and left his wife and two children to go to Camp Sheridan but, impelled by a desire to see his family, he returned home. His father, a civil war veteran, told him that he was a deserter and Amerine hid in a cave living mostly on herbs, wild berries and game. The military authorities abandoned their search for him and last week an attorney, a friend of the family, induced him to give himself up, declaring that there was no danger of a firing squad. Today Amerine surrendered at Camp Sheridan and said he was pleased that "it is all over."
